101 Site Build It Sites

The purpose of this ebook is to let you look at some typical SBI sites, and judge for yourself if the SBI approach might work for you. These are not the 'Featured Sites' the company touts -- they would tend to pick the cream of the crop, wouldn't they?

Below are listed the 101 sites we looked at. These are not, strictly speaking, a random sample, but are more or less arbitrary and should be fairly representative of typical SBI sites. They were chosen by searching Google for the term "Powered by Site Build-It" (in quotes) which is commonly included at the bottom of SBI sites. There were about 5,720 results for that search, but some of the first were affiliate sites that were not built with SBI, so we jumped to page five of the results, and began selecting sites from there, until we had over 100. Non-SBI sites were of course skipped over, as were pages that were repeated from sites already included. So if there is any bias in our selection, it is that these sites ranked well for "Powered by Site Build-It" -- but we don't think that influenced the overall popularity or rank of the selected sites, as witnessed by the fact that over 25% of the sites had a Google pagerank of zero.

For each site we recorded the site URL and title, description and keywords from the HTML meta tags, and the Google pagerank (higher is better, no site ranked above 5), Yahoo Domain Links (higher is better), Google Search Position for the main keyword (lower is better, only searched up to position #50), and the Potential Traffic (Daily Traffic Estimate, higher is better).

Google Pagerank

Google pagerank was determined using the SeoQuake toolbar plug-in for Firefox.

Yahoo Domain Links

Since Google only lists a small fraction of incoming links, we used the Yahoo Domain Links results, also displayed in the SeoQuake toolbar. This is the count of links in the Yahoo database that point to any page on the target (SBI) site, not including any internal links from that site itself (i.e. navigation links).

Google Search Position

This is the position the target (SBI) site is listed in search results, when searching for the main keyword phrase. Generally, we used the first keyword or phrase listed in the Keywords Meta Tag, but occasionally we felt another word or phrase would be a fairer representation of how the site is positioned. To make it clear what keyword phrase was used, it is listed before the results. The results are numeric, from 1 to >50, with 1 representing the first position in the search results, and >50 meaning the site was not listed in the first 50 results.

While there are tools to get these results, we found it simpler to go directly to Google. We changed the default preference settings to display 50 results per page. Then we cut and pasted the keyword into the search box, without quotes. Next we copied the main part of the domain name (e.g. some.com, rather than http://www.some.com/index.htm) and searched the Google results page for that term using the FireFox browser's search capability, and noted the position if the term was found. If it was not found, the site position was noted as greater than 50 (>50).

Daily Traffic Estimate

The Daily Traffic Estimate, or Potential Traffic, is a measure of the number of times the keyword was searched in all major search engines, the daily average for the preceding month. This was measured using the Tools.SeoBook.com site, using the same keyword as was searched for in Google. This measure is an estimate by that website, and may not be accurate, but is probably relatively accurate (i.e. good for comparing the relative popularity of terms) and so useful for comparing different websites keywords to one another. If the keyword was not found, results were noted as 'less than one' (<1).

Page Rank and Position

The following graph shows the results of our search for the primary keyword for each site, in relation to the Google pagerank for the site. The pagerank is shown along the bottom, and ranges from zero to five. The left side shows the position, and goes up to 50 because only the first 50 results were examined. The top line, at 50 should be ignored -- those were really >50.

The sites nearest the bottom are well positioned -- those at and below the line for position 10 are displayed on the first page of results. Studying the graph closely we see that the higher the page rank, the greater the percentage of sites at that rank are found in the first 10 positions. Here is a table displaying that detail:

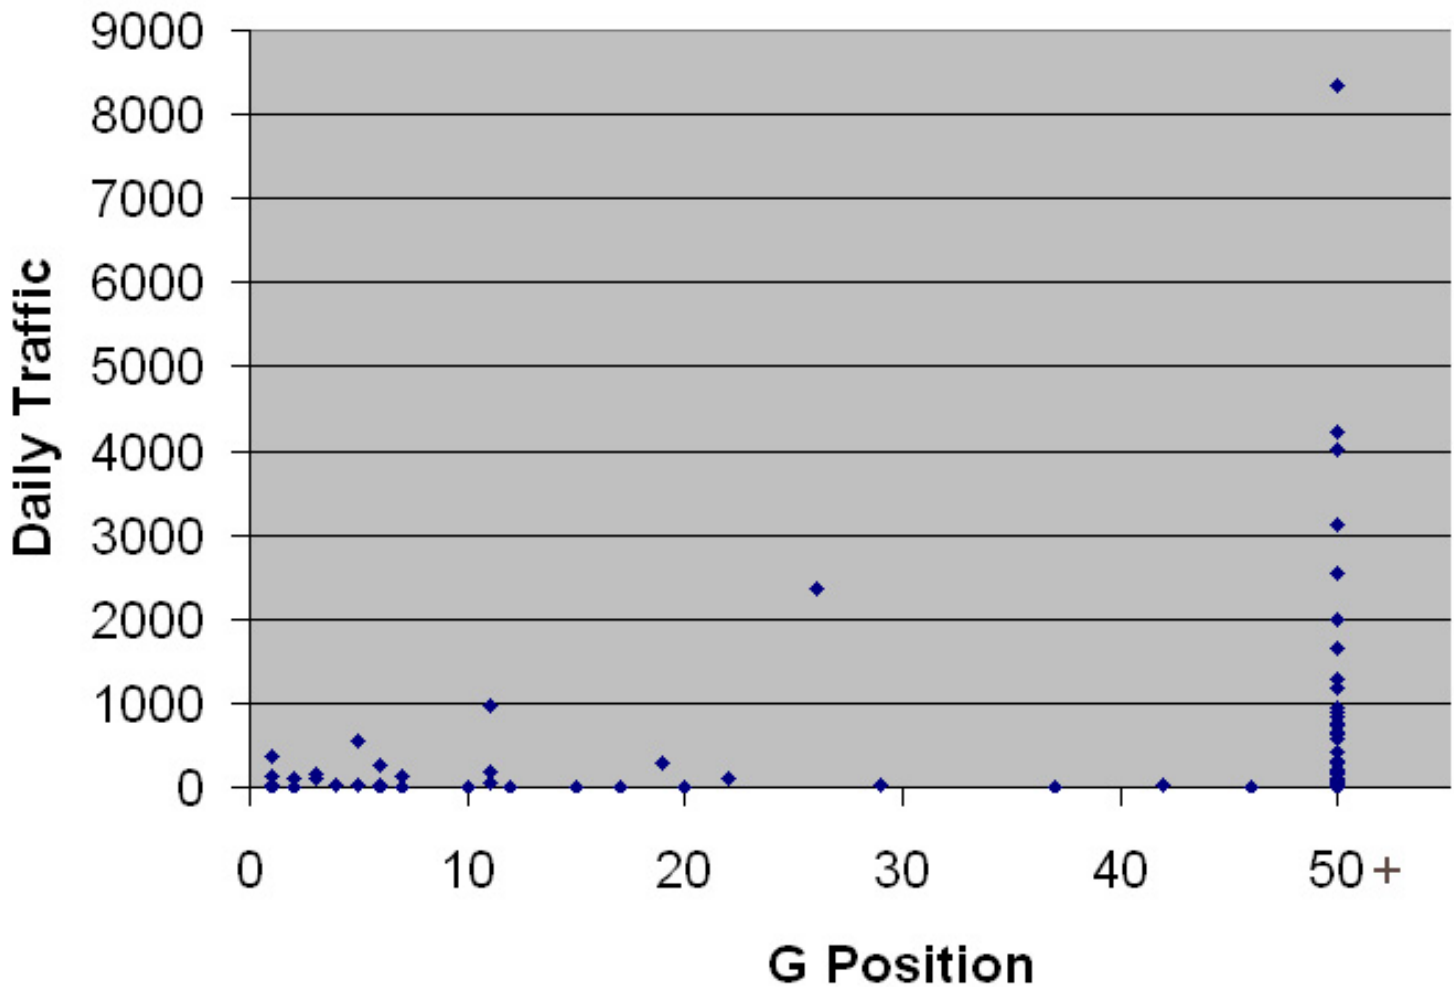

Pagerank	# of Sites	% Positioned in first 10
0	27	7.4%
1	16	18.8%
2	22	18.2%
3	26	42.0%
4	9	66.7%
5	1	100%

So there is a strong correlation between pagerank and position, but it is not absolute. Even PR0 sites can appear in the top ten results, if the competition for that position is weak. That occurs most often when there are few results for the search term.

A search term may yield few results because nobody searches for it, however. In which case even a #1 position in the search results is not of much value. So we looked at the position of each site in relation to the estimated number of daily searches for the target keyword for that site.

In the following graph, the position numbers are along the bottom, and the left side has the estimated daily traffic numbers. Again, the right-most results, where the position shows 50, are actually >50, and should be ignored.

Position vs Traffic

Here we can see that most of the sites that were found in the search results have keyword terms with relatively few searches. This makes sense, as it is easier to reach the top search results for less competitive terms (those searched less frequently).

Again, we can use a table to break down these results into meaningful groups. In this case, let's just make three groups, and see how many sites fall within each. Group 1 is sites that have a keyword that is too uncommon, so that it gets searched less than once per day (i.e. those at the bottom of the graph). Group 2 are in the 'sweet spot' where the keyword term is common enough to have a search frequency greater than zero, yet uncompetitive enough that the site is found in the top 20 results; or sites that searched frequently (1000 or more daily searches) and are found in the top 50 results. Group #3 are all the rest of the sites, mostly those that are not in the first 50 listings for their main keyword. They may have a term that gets plenty of searches, but they are so far down in the results that they will rarely be found by anyone searching that term.

% of Sites
Keyword too Uncommon	Sweet Spot	Poor Positioning
21%	25%	54%

Thus we can see that approximately 1/4 of the sites are well positioned for good keywords. The most common problem other sites face is being poorly positioned -- often that is due to having chosen a primary keyword that is too competitive. In other cases, the sites just don't have enough incoming links, or incoming links of sufficient authority, to rank well. That can be remedied by getting more (and/or better) incoming links. But about one in five just chose the wrong keyword phrase to begin with -- it is no good to be at the #1 position for a term nobody searches.

Sites by MyScore

MyScore is a ranking formula I developed to measure how well these sites are performing on the measured criteria (pagerank, incoming links, potential traffic, and position in search results). It is not supposed to measure anything particularly accurately, but rather to give a good idea of the relative ranking of these sites on all the combined criteria.

The position a site has in the search results are only relevant for the particular keyword (or keyword phrase) that was used. Ranking #1 for a term nobody searches, however, is of no real value. So for that value we multiplied the adjusted traffic estimate by a value for the position that reduces logarithmically, (1/1, 1/2, 1/4 ...) since the further from the first position results are, the amount of traffic decreases logarithmically.

We divide the number of incoming links by 100 then take the square root of the results to reflect the fact that, while more incoming links are better, that benefit diminishes with growing numbers. This doesn't really begin to take into account all the variables that affect the value of incoming links (i.e. are they reciprocal or one-way, how many from the same domain, etc.), but all those variables are already factored into the Google pagerank. Basically we adjusted this so it has some effect on the total MyScore, but not much.

The MyScore formula: $pr + \text{square root}((YL)/100) + (\text{traffic}/100 * 1/\text{pos})$, where pr is Google pagerank, YL is the number of links shown pointing to the site in Yahoo (not include on-site links), and traffic is the average daily search traffic for the main keyword phrase (less than one per day <1 is treated as 1); and pos is the Google position, where greater than 50 (>50) is simply calculated as if it were 50, both of which skew results somewhat. Traffic/100 and $\text{sqr rt}(YL)/100$ are rounded to one decimal point of accuracy (e.g. 1.5437854 becomes 1.5).

So What?

So we can see that the Gifts (3.3), Sports (3.1), How-To (2.9), Pets (2.4), and Travel (2.5) categories were above average scores, Celebrations (2.2), Music (2.1), New Age (2.1), Food (2.0), and Other (2.0) categories were at or very near average, and Religion (1.9) Health (1.6), and Business (1.4) categories were below average. If we look at the individual sites, we see that 46 sites were above average scores, 14 sites were at or very near average, and 41 sites were below average. Almost every category included sites both above and below average, excepting only Gifts and Sports, neither of which had a below-average site.

I think that demonstrates that people building SBI sites tend to either 'get it' or not, relatively few fall in-between with only mediocre results. Almost half 'get it' and do well, at least in some respects (pagerank, site positioning, potential traffic). A few do spectacularly, excelling in all those measurements.

What about those who don't 'get it'? are their sites wasted effort? In some cases yes, their sites are fundamentally flawed, with poor selection of topic. Their sites will probably never do well, unless they are entirely re-designed, so they will likely be abandoned in a year or two.

Many more of the poorly performing sites, however, can be improved -- and may perform much better in the future. We did not factor in the age of these sites, for example. New sites are expected to perform less well on page rank and positioning, as they need to build up their incoming links over time. Some sites may be improved with additional content, or more focused content as well. In these cases, so long as the owners do not become discouraged, and continue to work on promoting their sites, they can still do well.

Summary and Recommendations

So what do you think? Site-Build-It is certainly an efficient system. When you consider that most of their customers had little or no experience building websites, it is astounding to see them rank as well as they do. Many of these sites clearly make money for their owners.

Is it for YOU?

Is SBI right for you? That depends on your circumstances. If you already have profitable websites, but are looking for ways to improve them, I'd say SBI is not the way to go. By all means, study these sites and the information available on the Site-Sell website. But the costs are probably higher than the benefits for your circumstances, so don't buy a site.

If you are in any other situation -- buy an SBI site and follow the process through! You will learn enough that you can then go on to build other successful sites, without all the hand-holding and step by step guidance. Or if you have existing sites that are not profitable, you will learn what you need to know to turn them around.

Why Buy Through AJMORRIS?

Obviously, I am an SBI affiliate, and will get a commission if you purchase through my link (assuming you have not already purchased a SiteSell product). Bypassing my affiliate link will not save you anything, the price remains the same however you purchase.

But How About If I Sweeten the Pot?

I wouldn't recommend SBI if I didn't believe in it. And if you are going to buy it, if it is right for you -- then naturally I'd prefer you purchase through my affiliate link. So, to make it even more attractive, I'm going to offer you special bonuses that help ensure that YOU are among those who succeed at building a profitable site.

The exact nature of bonuses I offer will change from time to time, so I am not going to list them here. Instead, check out the web page below, which has an SBI purchase link and lists the bonuses you will get by ordering through my affiliate link. Go there now, and order now -- you will never get anywhere procrastinating ...
